Some Truths About Soap

Did you know the bath soap you buy in the supermarket is not soap? It is detergent.
Detergents were developed during the Second World War because of a shortage of true soap for the armed forces. Detergents are petroleum products, like gasoline and kerosene.
Detergents strip the oils from your skin along with the dirt. That's why your skin feels dry and somewhat uncomfortable after bathing with supermarket bath bars. The list of ingredients in those supermarket bars almost requires a chemistry degree to read.

One of the ways around this uncomfortable dryness is to use true soap, which is hand crafted by soapmakers. Hand crafted soaps are made from natural oils, such as olive, coconut, and palm, and often contain combinations of natural additives, such as herbs, teas, oatmeal, honey, milk, and flower blossoms. Anyone can read and understand the ingredient list of hand crafted soaps. Hand crafted soaps gently lift the dirt on your skin into suspension, releasing, not ripping, the dirt so it can be washed away.
Hand crafted soaps leave moisturizing soothing oils behind. Hand crafted soaps make bathing a gentle, soothing experience for your body.
